About civil and family law. Civil and family law is a legal system based on written laws and codes, as opposed to common law based on court decisions and precedents. In the civil law system, laws are usually codified. That is, this can prevent future collisional States. For example, the Civil Code of the Republic of Uzbekistan is almost the same as the Civil Code of the Republic of Germany, and in civil matters with this state, disproportionate and collisional norms do not arise. Civil law systems are studied in many countries separated by family law. In particular, France is used in many countries such as Germany, Japan and Latin America. These systems are often based on Roman law and increase the importance of written laws, legal codes.

In the civil legal system, the role of judges consists in interpreting and developing the law through its decisions, as it is written. That is to say that the law Bashoratli

In general, in Uzbekistan, like other countries of the world, the legal system is based on civil law. This means that laws are usually it is codified and applied by judges directly, without relying on past cases.

From the point of view of family law, this means that family-related issues such as marriage, divorce, custody of children and inheritance are regulated by written law and legal codes. Instead of interpreting and devising the law through their decisions, judges apply these laws in writing.

The essence of civil and family law. Civil and family law are two important areas of law within society that address conflicts and problems between individuals and families.

Some important information on civil and Family Law: Civil Law:

1. Civil law deals with disputes between individuals or organizations, such as contracts, property disputes, personal injury claims.
2. Civil law cases are usually decided by proceedings in a civil court, where the judge or judges decide the case.
3. Civil law also covers areas such as the infringement Act relating to civil offenses and obligations, property law governing the ownership and use of real and real estate.
4. Civil law cases often involve complex legal issues an.

FAMILY LAW:

1. Family law deals with legal issues related to family relationships such as divorce, adoption, familial violence.
2. Family law also covers areas such as marriage and family partnerships, child support and alimony collection, paternity testing.
3. Family law issues are often emotional and sensitive in nature, as they involve the well-being and stability of families and children.
4. Family law matters are usually resolved through a family court hearing, where the judge decides on issues such as guardianship, visitation, and support.
5. Family law lawyers specialize in dealing with family-related legal issues, and may provide guidance and representation to individuals who are establishing complexities of family law.

In short, civil and Family Law play a decisive role in resolving disputes, protecting rights and ensuring justice in society. It is important that individuals understand their rights and obligations provided for in these areas of law and seek legal assistance when faced with civil or family law issues.

It is important that individuals in Uzbekistan understand the legislative system and how it applies to family law issues, especially if they are involved in any legal issues related to the family. In such situations, it is helpful to consult a lawyer who has knowledge of civil law and family law in Uzbekistan.

Aspects of family law proportional to civil law. The importance of family law in relation to civil law is subjective and depends on individual circumstances. Family law deals with legal issues related to family relationships such as divorce, adoption, familial violence. These problems are very personal and can have a significant impact on people and their loved ones. Civil law, on the other hand, involves broader legal disputes that do not necessarily involve family relations. These include contract disputes, property disputes, personal injury claims, and labor law issues.

Although these issues are not as personal as those of family law, they can have serious consequences for the participants. Ultimately, both family law and civil law play an important role in the legal system and in meeting the various legal needs of individuals and organizations. The importance of each area of law depends on specific legal issues and their impact on the parties involved.

Collisional problems that arise in the field of civil and family law. Civil issues in Uzbekistan include a wide range of legal disputes between individuals or organizations. These include contract disputes, property disputes, personal injury claims, labor law issues, etc. Civil law provides a framework for resolving these disputes through the legal system, often through civil litigation or alternative dispute resolution methods such as mediation or litigation. Civil matters are usually decided through tuma or provincial level civil courts, depending on the nature of the dispute and applicable law.

Issues of enforcement of a foreign court document on civil and family law issues. In matters of family law, the implementation of foreign court documents and civil issues is considered to be particularly complex and important. This is the case international disputes over the guardianship of obolas, recognition of civil marriages or divorces, include issues related to oimmigraphy.

In such cases, Family Law plays a decisive role in determining the rights and obligations of individuals in cross-border situations, as well as ensuring the protection of children and family members in need of social prot

- dual citizenship,
- naturalization,
- immigration status,

may include complex legal considerations such as These issues have far-reaching consequences for individuals and their families, so this situation makes them very important in the field of family law.

In general, the importance of family law in solving issues of enforcement of foreign court documents and civil issues cannot be reduced, since it directly affects the life and legal rights of individuals and their families.

Conclusion: In conclusion, to establish the condition of the competence of individuals to conclude a marriage-at, most countries widely apply the cumulative action of the criterion of the Personal Law of an individual (lex personalis). That is, in relation to each of the marriages, the material and legal norms established in the Personal Law of the oining are added.

But in different systems of law, they rely on different criteria calculated is the law of residence (lex domicilii) in states belonging to the anglo-Saxon system of law. Even in states with the same system of law, these criteria are formulated differently.

I have touched in detail on the issues of which judicial document the states apply, which state law is followed when collisional situations arise, how to eliminate collisional problems, the adoption of court documents on these issu.
