Negative affects of word choice .

The English language includes a wide variety of words, most of these words have its own positive and negative meaning. Occasionally, individuals do not know about the influences of their words that is utilized in the wrong condition. For example, children who were grown at home that callous and cruel conditions are available bring up with hurting both in physical and also mental way. Additionally, after hearing bad words from close members of the family they never and ever respect themselves and lose the self-esteem next to others without understanding what it is. And also, they take shape like that bad behaviours. With this anxious habits people do not owe the gorgeous feelings that close individuals give as friendship, love, esteem and something like that.

We can imagine this scene: two girls are looking through a magazine, and one of them sees an ad for perfume. When her friend sees the model in the ad she says, 'That girl is really thin.' By that, the girl means that the model is underweight. What if her friend had said, 'That girl is really skinny.' In this sentence, the word 'skinny' also means underweight, but the two sentences are not quite the same. The first one sounds more positive and the second one sounds a little critical or negative. In literature, specific word choices can affect the meaning and tone of the story. So, it is really crucial to use the suitable word in context or we might totally change the meaning of the whole sentence.

Connotation and Denotation

Let's learn some terms that will better help us talk about word choice. A word's denotation is the definition of the word. In our first example, both 'skinny' and 'thin' have the same denotation. What's different about them is the connotation, or the feeling invoked by a word. 'Thin' brings out positive feelings, but 'skinny' brings out feelings that are just a little bit negative. Imagine you're writing a story about a character who uses a wheelchair. If you describe that character as 'disabled,' your reader gets one feeling, but if you use a loaded word like 'crippled,' the reader has a much harsher reaction.

The tone of a story is the attitude of the speaker. One more example: imagine the speaker in a novel is describing another character. He says, 'Bill may have been 72 years old, but he acted youthful.' He's describing an older man who acts much younger than his years. This sentence creates a positive tone towards Bill. Here's another version: 'Bill may have been 72 years old, but he acted childlike.' Hmm. . . not so positive. Bill doesn't sound like a fun, energetic guy; he sounds immature and annoying. Just one word with a different connotation can dramatically change the tone of a sentence!
