The phraseological system in each language has its own characteristics and is lexically different from the system in the formation of its units, since phraseological units consist of words, structurally speaking to a phrase or sentence is equivalent to. The use of words and phraseological units as sentences is their common similarity. However, phraseological system units to the level of a sentence in terms of their structural forms and some functions approx.[1]

If the meaning of a word is the structural sum of morphemes, (of speech belonging, valence, and distribution to a given part, with denotative-significative opposition) in phraseological units this phenomenon has a different character. Indeed, phraseological units are his thought based on combining the meanings of its components directed denotative is a signifying integrity. Phraseological a new integral is a unit of meaning based on the linguistic integration of units occurs. At the same time some integrable of the phrase components, and sometimes all components, have their main characteristics loses. The higher the degree of integration, the more phraseological units the words that form move away from their original meaning, and vice versa, the integration the lower the level, the more the phrase to a free phrase and a free sentence will be close.

Reflecting the validity of the above theoretical theses let's turn to the analysis of linguistic materials. Thus together, our main task is to establish phraseological units in the Uzbek language it is not the study of structural or semantic properties, since they are differently studied in sufficient detail on the material. Here analysis of the linguistic and cultural aspects of phraseological units aim. Linguocultural aspects are usually pragmalinguistic in speech it is carried out through the manifestation of aspects. There is also a turtle in the field of Uzbek linguistics, the slowness of the language meaning as well. But here it is only a synonym for the concept of camel used as.
